The World Health Organization (WHO) estimates that more than 1 in 4 child deaths could be prevented by cleaning up the environment.

Because of their developing bodies and minds, children can be at greater risk of harm to environmental toxicants than adults. This program will provide information on common sources of environmental hazards in the air, water, and even in our homes and schools.

Viewers will learn how to offer evidence-based, practical advice to families, schools, and communities to promote a healthy environment.
